“Wine is sunlight, held together by water.” Galileo Galilei

STANFORD BARN HISTORY LOCATION OF VINA ENOTECA

VINA ENOTECA is located at the historic Stanford Barn.

The barn was built over a period of two years, from 1886-1888.

Its original design was as a winery for the surrounding vineyards.

The first floor was devoted to cellarage, the second floor was a fermenting room, and the third floor was for crushing grapes.

Grapes were carried up to the third floor by a chain elevator.

The juice and skins were taken by chutes to the second floor.

The new wine was then pumped to the first floor into aging tanks.

The machinery for these operations was run by a steam engine housed in the small brick building (current home of Tootsie's) 65 feet away.

The high-quality aged wines were sold under the Palo Alto trademark and were also in easy access to Stanford's dining tables. Stanford saw wine as a positive factor in the promotion of health, relaxation, and temperance.

“Its general use among the people as a beverage in the family, on the dining table, is beneficial.”
